Oregon's High School Health-Related Career and Technical Education

- High school Career and Technical Education (CTE) programs use real-world, competency-based curriculum to prepare students for high-skill, high-demand, high-wage careers through certifications, career pathways, and academic degrees.
- In the 2013-2014 school year, 47 health-related CTE programs were offered in 49 high schools in 19 of Oregon's 36 counties (or 16% of all public and charter schools). This included six high schools in Klamath County, six in Marion County, five in Washington County, and four in Multnomah County.
- In 2012, there were 42 high school health career-related CTE programs in 20 Oregon counties, including a new regional program developed by Heppner, Pendleton, and Umatilla High Schools. This school count included six high schools in Klamath County, five in Marion County, and three high schools each in Lane, Linn, Multnomah, Tillamook, Umatilla, Washington, and Wheeler counties.
- In 2010, there were 55 high school health career-related CTE programs in 21 counties in Oregon. This included seven high schools in Klamath County, six in Marion County, five in Lane County, and five in Washington County.

Oregon's Area Health Education Centers

- Oregon's Area Health Education Centers (AHEC) work to improve the availability, continuity, and quality of health care for Oregon's communities through the development of a well-prepared, high quality health care workforce. AHEC programs start in K-16 education through professional training and into support for practicing professionals.
- In 2014, the regional AHECs offered a variety of health career-related programs in 83 of Oregon's high schools (including one tribal middle/high school education program) in 25 counties. The large majority of these AHEC programs were in high schools in rural communities.
- In 2014, the AHECs provided health career-related programs in 36% of Oregon's public and charter high schools.
